ZJA is an internationally oriented office founded in 1990 by Rein Jansma and Moshe Zwarts. The ZJA team is specialized in infrastructure, public transport, sport and leisure. The office draws on state-of-the-art technical expertise thanks to amongst others its independent research & development department. Next to their technical expertise their work also has a strong artistic dimension, that is based on a inquisitive and distinct observation of the world. As Rein Jansma puts it: 'Wherever we go, we look. At people, at cyclists, at queues, at building materials, at rituals, at supporters, at how people move in a park, at history, at menus, at a dune, at advertising. Everything we see finds its way back into our work'

The Office Lamp is constructed with a stack of octahedrons; eight equilateral faces. It is made with everyday materials, paper, plastic and wire-o, that can be found at every office and can be used for different purposes. With this in mind Rein Jansma has thought of a new way on how to connect everyday materials and to design a new sustainable product. The office lamp has a resemblance with the radar mast at Zandvoort which was designed by Zwarts & Jansma Architects (ZJA) in 2013, that on his turn was based on a lamp: the Akari by the American/Japanese designer and artist Isamu Noguchi.

Rein Jansma/ZJA produce the Office Lamp on demand by hand, as a collectors item, specially for the Cityscapes Builders Collection. So far they made a 3- and a 4 storey variant. A 5 storey version of the Office Lamp can be made on demand.
